

Swapping free markets, property rights and grid reliability for red tape and overreach

What SB 819 Does

Despite revisions in a committee substitute, Senate Bill 819 still erodes private property rights, injects government overreach into competitive markets, and threatens grid reliability. It empowers regulators to impose arbitrary land use restrictions, grants unchecked and unscientific setback authority, and mandates redundant end-of-life bonding requirements. By treating private investments like monopoly utilities and expanding the scope of government to discriminate against critical infrastructure like clean energy power plants, the bill would cripple investment, affordability, and the "Texas Miracle."

Why SB 819 Doesn't Work

- Lays claim to the horizon and erodes property rights by letting neighbors decide what others can build on their land—based on nothing more than what they want to see out their window.
  - This sets a dangerous precedent for broader government overreach into agriculture, oil and gas, and other private land uses—undermining Texas' tradition of property rights and signaling a willingness to trade them for short-term political gain.
- Undermines Texas' commitment to limited government by giving unelected bureaucrats broad new powers over private property and contracts and expanding the roles of state agencies.
  - Wind and solar projects already face strict oversight and decommissioning requirements, yet SB 819 singles them out with new permitting burdens—adding red tape and costs without environmental benefit.
- Threatens grid reliability and raises electricity costs by slowing or halting the development of low-cost, fastest to market power sources from the grid at a time when Texas needs every megawatt.
  - Limiting access to affordable power will increase Texans' electricity bills—some estimates predict as much as $115 billion over 15 years—and make rolling blackouts more likely.

The Bottom Line

 SB 819 unravels the very principles Texas claims to champion: private property rights, limited government, economic freedom, and energy dominance.

VOTE NO on SB 819!